ABSTRACT

The bibliography contains a listing of language families and language taxonomies for India, a map showing the general distribution of those languages, and listings of dictionaries for those languages. Each listing contains basic bibliographic information and the catalogue number assigned to that volume in the University of Arizona's library. Citations are categorized by language or languages: polyglot, Indo-Aryan languages (Hindi, English-Hindi, Hindi-English, Hindi-Indo-Aryan, Hindi-Dravidian, Hindi-Austric, Hindi-Tibeto-Burman, Bengali, Gujarati, Marathi, Nepali, Panjabi, and others); Dravidian languages (Kannada, Malayalam, Tamil, Telugu); Austric languages (Khasi, Santali); and Tibeto-Burman languages (Miju, Paite, Manipuri). The citations are also indexed by language, subject, author, and reverse chronology. (MSE)

Introduction

The large number of languages in use today in India, present a special problem to those who study the region. For these researchers the major need is an extensive and readily availablereference guide to these languages.

This bibliography was compiled to provide such a guide, utilizing the resources available at the University of Arizona.[1] While an effort was made to include as many South Asian languages as possible those which utilize the Persian script have been omited due,primarily, to their limited use in India and in the interests of space.

The bibliography is arranged according to language family (see following listing for language families and taxonomies), and,inthe case of Hindi, it has been broken down further due to the large number of entries. While the L.C. catalogue number has been included be aware that these numbers are based on the University of Arizona's holdings and may vary slightly from institution to institution.
